CHICK CHATS

As feeding costs go up, the loafing layer becomes a more expensive "boarder.." Often her appetite is undiminished, although she may have ceased to lay eggs several days before.

The high cost of poultry feed leaves the average producer the choice between two courses of action. One is to cull more closely the non-layers. The alternative is to attempt to get the non-layer back into production as quickly as possible, before the drain on the purse becomes burdensome.

Many poultry-raisers find that the use of a concentrated antibiotic vitamin tonic will have a beneficial effect on poor producers. In this way they are able to keep the size of the flock at the desired level, without having to support a few loafers.

Of course, it is inadvisable to waste too much time and feed on lazy producers. Any hen which fails to respond within a reasonable length of time should be culled and sold.

Many poultrymen will prefer culling the poor producers immediately upon noticing that their laying record is not up to par. This is a sure method for avoiding unnecessary feed waste; but on the other hand, it is always possible that some of the birds which were culled might have developed into good layers.

Farmer's Debts Are Now on Par With His Assets

NEW YORK—For the first time in more than a decade, farmers' aggregate debts are on a par with their cash assets, according to figures compiled by the U. S. Department of Agriculture. Both totals are at new high levels, but debts have shown the greater rate of growth of the two in recent years, in common with the trend in the rest of the economy.

The Department of Agriculture estimates that farmers owed an aggregate of $20.7 billions at the beginning of this year in mortgage and non-real estate debt, including Commodity Credit Corporation loans. At that time, their combined holdings of currency, bank deposits (checking and savings), U. S. Savings Bonds, and investments in cooperatives added up to an estimated $20.4 billions.

Thus, when 1957 got underway, farmers had about 99 cents in cash for every dollar of debt. Relationships this low have not been seen since the early Forties. Back in 1950, for example, farmers had more than $1.40 in cash or its equivalent for every dollar they owed. The proportion was even higher at the end of World War II, reflecting wartime prosperity which enabled farmers to save more than ever before during the period and at the same time to reduce their debts to the lowest levels in years.

However, the present relationship between financial assets and debts is still far better than it was in 1940, when farmers in the aggregate had only 50 cents in cash or its equivalent for every dollar they owed. Furthermore, other savings and assets in agriculture have increased greatly in recent years. Right now, for instance, three out of every four farm families own life insurance.

Medicine, Religion In Closer Accord

CHICAGO—American medicine and religion are in closer accord today than in any period in modern times, according to the Journal of the American Medical Association.

A special article and editorial in the Journal discusses the growing cooperation between our half million "men in black" and "men in white."

Perhaps this has happened because the individual is re-emerging from his "part of the mass" status, which came with the mechanization and specialization of society, the editorial states. With leisure time overtaking working time, the individual shines again, and he "wants to know more about himself and how he relates to all men and all things of all times."

A Chicago physician, who participated in a two-and-a-half-hour struggle to revive a young man whose heart had stopped, said "Actually, we never were sure throughout that we were completely alone in this thing. We knew we were getting some guidance."

Free Ports Bolstering Greater World Trade

WASHINGTON — Holland's free port at Amsterdam's Schiphol Airport is the world's second shopping paradise catering exclusively to air travelers. Shannon, Ireland—a stopover for most transatlantic flights—first adapted the free port concept to the air lanes in 1947.

Currently more than 100 free ports or similar facilities are maintained in 25 countries. While most are located in harbors, some are landlocked towns such as Linz, Austria, and Nogales, Mexico.

Following the modern trend, the majority of free-trade areas are tightly restricted zones within cites, inaccessible to the public. Only a handful of internationalized ports such as Hong Kong and Singapore still preserve the old free-wheeling traditions, with doors open to all comers and few or not duties imposed on imports.

Farmer Saves Chickens By Using Blinders

CHICAGO—A farmer in Holland discovered an ingenious solution to a familiar problem. When one of the chickens in his flock got accidentally pecked and began to bleed, others in the flock, excited by the sight of blood, would peck the injured one to death.

The farmer was losing a dozen chickens a week in this way until he had aluminum spectacles fastened to the birds so that they could not see ahead to attack each other but could still see downward and sidewise. The cannabilism then stopped, and chicken production went up 20 per cent.

Silt-Laden
WASHINGTON—On an average day some half a million tons of silt ride the Colorado River down to Lake Mead, the huge reservoir created by Hoover Dam. During the flood year of 1927 the river carried 27,600,000 tons of silt past a given point in 24 hours.
